In Memoriam

In memory of Travis Taylor Wooldridge who passed away October 1, 1965.

It's lonesome here without you
We miss you more each day.
Life hasn't been the same
Since God took you away.
Our hearts still aches with sadness,
Our eyes shed many a tear
God only knows how much
we miss you
At the end of eleven long years.

Sadly missed by his wife, children and grandchildren.

Capitol Comments
By Dan Daniel

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13 - As this Bicentennial year progresses, we find more and more material about our beginnings which expands our knowledge and, hopefully our understanding. Go back with me in time more than 200 years. It is July 4, 1776, and Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin and John Adams have completed their assignment. The Declaration of Independence has been signed. Now each should be allowed to take his place in history, to get on with the business of the new nation, and to devote the remainder of each day to his chosen pursuits.

Or so they must have thought. But it was not to be this way, for on that date so significant in our history, these three men received a new assignment. It was to devise a seal, an official emblem for the new nation.

And despite the illustriousness of this original committee, in true Congressional fashion it took six years, three committees, several consultants and some arbitrary decisions by the Secretary of the Congress before the task was completed. And tomorrow, Sept. 16, marks the 194th anniversary of its approval in 1782, as an official document in the United States.

Everything embodied in the Great Seal of the U.S. has a meaning, and at each stage of the development of the design, contributions were made which remain today.

Three features recommended by the first committee were eventually adopted in the final seal - the Eye of Providence and the date of Independence (MDCCLXXVI) appear on the reverse side, and the Latin motto, E. PLURIBUS UNUM (out of many, one) on the obverse. This first design was submitted on Aug. 20, 1776, but the Congress tabled it.

It was four years later, in March, 1780, that the second committee was established. They, too, were unsuccessful in designing an acceptable seal, but contributed to the final design - the 13 red and white stripes, and the constellation of 13 stars. They also added the olive branch, a symbol of peace.

The third committee was appointed in May of 1782. Rather than tackle the job themselves, they obtained the services of one William Barton of Philadelphia. Barton was a young lawyer, with artistic skills and some knowledge of heraldry. His contribution was the eagle - not the bald eagle we presently know, but the crested eagle, similar to that of Imperial Germany.

It finally fell to Charles Thompson, Secretary of the Congress, to take the work of the three committees and the various consultants they had utilized, and work out what is basically the seal we now have. In the process he replaced the crested eagle with the native American bald eagle, and added a bundle of arrows to the eagle's left talon.

Symbolically, the seal reflects the straightforward beliefs and spiritual values of the founders, and not surprisingly, every element has its own symbolism. There are 13 arrows, 13 stripes and 13 stars in the constellation, representing the 13 original states. The olive branch and the bundle of arrows "denote the power of peace and war."

The reverse side has been called the spiritual side of the seal, and not without reason. It contains an unfinished pyramid, which has Biblical connotations and which some take (though it was never officially said) to indicate that the job of building the nation was not yet completed. As it summit is the Eye of Providence, surrounded by rays of light and above that is the Lation motto, ANNUIT COEPTIS, (He has favored our undertakings). Along the lower part of the design is another Latin phrase: NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM (A new order of the ages). And indeed it was. The world has never again been the same.

The first die was cut from brass in 1782, and since that time five additional ones have been made. There have been modifications - the eagle is somewhat fatter, the shield more in proportion - but there have been no major changes in 194 years.

The Great Seal of the United States is used between 2,000 and 3,000 times a year and each time it is impressed on a document, this nation once more makes a statement of its roots and of its beliefs.
